Morning Comments

Funds hammered CBOT corn Friday night, apart from positioning prior to a long weekend in the US most of the downside was attributed to strength in the US dollar and further European financial woes. Spain's credit rating was downgraded from AAA to AA+, gee no-one saw that coming. Chicago wheat was never going to survive a sell off once news Egypt had bought 180k of Russian wheat under current US prices, the funds also chipping in by ditching 6,000 contracts. Fund influence should not be underestimated on these markets, don't get too caught up in the fundamentals when timing a sale. Local markets drifted lower as the dollar staged a recovery and traders began to withdraw from the market late Friday prior to the weekend. General rain across most of the eastern and western wheat belt should prove bearish for new crop multigrade basis this week. Ideal growing conditions here and in the US will likely see markets continue to drift lower in the short term unless we see some further unexpected support as we have in recent weeks. It was interesting to see China confirm they will continue to buy European securities but yet the German gov is considering freezing all derivative markets not just short selling. It will also be interesting to see how much money Mr Rudd can spend selling the mining tax especially now the miners have joined forces to fund their own advertising campaign. Look for a softer week ahead unless outside markets assist.

Weather

Low level cloud should begin to clear late today with the low cell moving off the east coast and into the Tasman. High pressure will dominate the week ahead with easterly winds potentially bringing showers over the ranges Tuesday > Thursday, with possible storms appearing over the area on Wednesday and Thursday before clearing on the weekend. Coastal rain is likely to persist all week. Temps are expected to range from 10 - 20 this week.
